Biology clearly influences the way that society divides people of all ages. Different age groups also experience many aspects of life in different ways, such as work, leisure and personal relationships.

However, some sociologists argue that other factors, such as gender and ethnicity, are more important in shaping our identity.

In recent years the UK has moved to a more diverse pattern of family arrangements. Some sociologists would suggest that the changes in household structures and relationships show that the traditional family has declined. For example, postmodernists would argue that there is now more individual choice about relationships.

However, other sociologists argue that these changes have been exaggerated.

Research has shown that there are important differences in health chances based on ethnicity. This may be due to a range of factors which include material and cultural differences as well as racism and discrimination.

However, some sociologists argue that factors such as class, gender and age are also important in shaping health chances. There are significant differences in health chances within a range of minority ethnic groups.

Applying material from Item C and your knowledge, evaluate sociological explanations for ethnic differences in health chances. [20 marks]

Marxist sociologists argue that poverty is related to the way capitalist societies are organised. The distribution of resources in society is determined by the class structure.

However, the New Right believe poverty is related to individual choices and cultural attitudes. Others may point out that gender, ethnicity and age are also significant factors in causing poverty.

Applying material from Item D and your knowledge, evaluate the view that poverty and inequality are caused by the class structure of society.
