Section B – Core Ideologies Extract Question

Read the extracts below and answer question 4 that follows.

Extract 1John Locke on the social contract

For Locke, legitimate government is instituted by the consent of those governed. Those who make this agreement transfer to government their right of executing the law of nature and judging their own case. Locke states in the Two Treatises that the power of the Government is limited to the public good and upholding natural law. It is a power that hath 'no other end but preservation' and therefore cannot justify killing, enslaving, or stealing from the citizens. Some supporters of classical liberalism read this as stating that governments exist only to protect people from infringements on their rights.

Extract 2Rawls's Original Position

The Original Position is a thought experiment: an imaginary situation in which each real citizen has a representative, and all of these representatives come to an agreement on which principles of justice should order the political institutions of the real citizens. As part of the Original Position citizens will consent to the laws that regulate property, contract, taxation, inheritance, hiring and minimum wages, and so on. Their task is not to allocate some fixed set of goods that appear from nowhere, but rather to devise a set of institutions for education, production, and distribution whose operation will ensure fair equality of opportunity over time.

The above extracts are adapted from Stanford Encyclopaedia of Philosophy, which is published by an American Ivy League university (the American version of the Russell group).
